

ABOUT THE CONTRIBUTORS

LU AIGUO is Senior Fellow at the Institute of World Economies and Politics, Chinese Academy of Social Science, Beijing. She has also served as Research Fellow at the World Institute of Development Economics Research in Helsinki, the United Nations University, Finland. Aiguo is the author of China and the Global Economy Since 1840 (Palgrave Macmillan, 1999). She completed her doctoral studies in Sociology at Binghamton University in 1992, her dissertation entitled “Household and Collective in Chinese and Soviet Agriculture.”

RODERICK (ROD) BUSH (1945-2013) was a Professor in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at St. John’s University. He earned his doctoral degree in sociology from Binghamton University in 1992, his dissertation entitled “Social Movements Among the Urban Poor: The U.S. in the Twentieth Century.” Bush is notable for his many publications (journal articles, book chapters, reviews, essays, etc.) including his editorship in 1984 of The New Black Vote: Politics and Power in Four American Cities and authorship of We Are Not What We Seem: Black Nationalism and Class Struggle in the American Century (1999), and The End of White World Supremacy: Black Internationalism and the Problem of the Color Line (2009) which won the Paul Sweezy Marxist Sociology Book Award from the American Sociological Association in 2010. In 2014, his and Melanie Bush's coauthored book Tensions in the American Dream: Rhetoric, Reverie or Reality was published by Temple University Press. Rod Bush, a lifelong activist, was during the last decade of his life a member of the national council of the Black Radical Congress and of the Executive Board of the Left Forum. In these capacities, he built bridges among the Black Left and Black Nationalist communities and with progressive and radical movements at large. Bush firmly upheld that the Black nationalism as expressed by the oppressed has been broad in vision and historically provided leadership to the struggle for human rights overall. He believed in the interconnectedness of the fate of all humanity and had unwavering faith in the power of the people to overcome all challenges.

NANCY FORSYTHE has taught Sociology and Women's Studies at the University of Maryland College Park, where she has been a Research Associate at the Center on Population, Gender and Social Inequality. Her research interests include theory, sociology of gender, social movements and comparative historical analysis. Forsythe has been the recipient of several research grant awards to study women in Latin America and global gender inequalities. In an extension of her graduate studies, Forsythe took a Fellowship at the Center for Women in Government (Rockefeller Institute, University of Albany), after which she worked on the staff of then-Governor Cuomo's Task Force on Poverty and Welfare Reform, as Director of the New York State Task Force on Work and Family and as Director of the Office for Work and Family in the New York State Department of Economic Development. She has served as the Director of Research for the International Women's Forum and as a member of Women's Eyes on the World Bank and as Vice-President of the Board of Directors for the Maryland Coalition for Inclusive Education.

WALTER L. GOLDFRANK is Professor Emeritus of Sociology at U.C. Santa Cruz. He obtained his doctorate from Columbia University in sociology in 1973. His areas of research interest has included the study of global political economy with special attention to the rise and decline of nations; social movements and revolutions; export agriculture and its impact on environmental and social conditions; social change; historical sociology; and world systems. He has edited The World-System of Capitalism: Past and Present (Sage, 1979) and, with David Goodman, Ecology and the World-System (Greenwood Press, 1999).

TERENCE K. HOPKINS (1929-1997) completed his doctoral studies at Columbia University in 1959. He joined the Columbia faculty in 1958 and remained there until 1970. In the 1960s, Hopkins conducted research in Uganda, and spent two years teaching at the University of the West Indies in Trinidad. He was a member of the Executive Committee of the Ad Hoc Faculty Group at Columbia during the 1968 rebellion. He came to Binghamton in 1970 in order to found its program of graduate studies in sociology, and he remained its Director for two decades. One of the founding fathers of world-systems analysis, Hopkins served as a member of the Executive Board of the Fernand Braudel Center for the Study of Economies, Historical Systems, and Civilizations. Terence K. Hopkins is the author of The Exercise of Influence in Small Groups (Bedminster Press, 1964) and has coedited, with Immanuel Wallerstein, The Age of Transition: Trajectory of the World-System, 1945-2025 (Zed Books, 1996); with Giovanni Arrighi and Immanuel Wallerstein, Antisystemic Movements (Verso, 1989); and with Immanuel Wallerstein, World-Systems Analysis: Theory and Methodology (Sage, 1982). Hopkins unexpectedly passed away, embraced by his loving family, students and colleagues on January 3, 1997.

RICHARD E. LEE is Professor of Sociology at Binghamton University (SUNY), Director of the Fernand Braudel Center for the Study of Economies, Historical Systems, and Civilizations and the editor of its publication, Review. Lee concentrates on the study of long-term, large-scale social change from the world-systems perspective, focusing on the long-term intellectual and disciplinary structures of knowledge formation in writings that range across the sciences, social sciences, and humanities. His courses have included: Theory and Methodology of Historical Social Science; Sociology of Music; Introduction to World-Systems Analysis; Classical Social Theory; and Structures of Knowledge. Most recently, Lee has edited The Longue Durée and World-Systems Analysis (SUNY Press, 2012). He earned his doctoral degree in sociology from Binghamton University in 1995, his dissertation entitled “Herald or Hydra? English Cultural Studies in the post 1945 World System.”

WILLIAM G. MARTIN is Professor of Sociology at Binghamton University (SUNY). His research and teaching interests include the historical construction of criminal justice systems, the study of Africa and the modern world, and social movements. His undergraduate courses have included courses on the worldwide growth of criminal justice systems, social justice movements, and the relation of Europe and America to Africa and people of African descent. His most recent publications include essays on decarceration and justice disinvestment in New York State; southern Africa, land and the world-economy; social justice movements, and the history of the study of Africa and people of African descent. Martin has edited Making Waves: Worldwide Social Movements, 1750-2005 (Routledge, 2008), and previously coedited Out of One, Many Africas: Reconstructing the Study and Meaning of Africa (Univ. of Illinois Press, 1999). He completed his doctoral studies in Sociology at Binghamton University in 1985, his dissertation entitled “The Making of a Semiperiphery: South Africa & the World-Economy, 1870-1945.”

REŞAT KASABA is Stanley D. Golub Professor of International Studies at the University of Washington and Director of its Jackson School of International Studies. Kasaba has been a researcher on the Ottoman Empire and Turkey covering economic history, state-society relations, migration, ethnicity and nationalism, and urban history with a focus on Izmir. The books and articles that he has written shed light on different aspects of the transformation of the Ottoman Empire and modern Turkey in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. They also constitute the parts of a holistic history. His work has focused on the social and economic history of the Ottoman Empire and modern Turkey and state-society relations in the Middle East from a historical perspective. He teaches courses on the modern Middle East as well as global history in the modern era. These courses are presented from a long term perspective, examining a series of themes and changes, by placing them within a broad temporal context. He has authored The Ottoman Empire and the World Economy: The Nineteenth Century (SUNY Press, 1988), and more recently A Moveable Empire: Ottoman Nomads, Migrants, and Refugees (Univ. of Washington Press, 2009). Kasaba completed his doctoral studies in Sociology at Binghamton University in 1986, his dissertation entitled “Peripheralization of the Ottoman Empire.”

PHILIP MCMICHAEL is Professor in the Department of Development Sociology at Cornell University. His research examines capitalist modernity through the lens of agrarian questions, food regimes, agrarian/food sovereignty movements, and most recently the implications for food systems of agrofuels and land grabbing. This work centers on the role of agri-food systems in the making of the modern world, including an examination of the politics of globalization via the structuring of agri-food relations. His current research concerns examining the ‘global land grab’ as a harbinger of the new bioeconomy, and as a process of relocating agriculture to land in the global South as the basis of a new food regime. His courses have included: Political Sociology of Development; World-historical Methods; Food, Ecology, and Agrarian Change; and International Development. More recently, he is the author of Development and Social Change: A Global Perspective (Sage, 2016), and Food Regimes and Agrarian Questions (Fernwood Publishing, 2013). McMichael earned his doctoral degree in sociology from Binghamton University in 1979, his dissertation entitled “Pastoralism and Capitalist Development in Nineteenth-Century Australia: A Study of Settler Capital Accumulation.”

RAVI ARVIND PALAT is Professor of Sociology at Binghamton University (SUNY). His research interests include historical sociology, political economy, nationalism and new forms of social conflict. He has worked on the historical sociology of the Indian Ocean region, on the parallel transformations of China and India since the mid-1800s, and on the rise of new patterns of antisystemic movements. Palat’s earlier work centered on the political economy of east and southeast Asia in the context of contemporary transformations of the capitalist world-economy. These projects build on a long-standing research interest in excavating the Eurocentric biases of social theory. This is complemented by an examination of the intellectual premises of area studies programs and on conceptualizing space. Palat teaches graduate seminars titled Political Economy of Asia, Asia in World-Historical Perspective, Comparative Hegemonies, among others; and undergraduate courses on the sociologies of colonialism, contemporary Asia, and of food. His more recent publications include The Making of an Indian Ocean World-Economy, 1250-1650: Princes, Paddy Fields, and Bazaars (Palgrave, 2015), and an edited volume, Capitalist Restructuring and the Pacific Rim (Routledge, 2012). Palat completed his doctoral studies in Sociology at Binghamton University in 1988, his dissertation entitled “From World-Empire to World Economy: Southeastern India and the Emergence of the Indian Ocean World-Economy 1350-1650.”

ELIZABETH MCLEAN PETRAS received her doctoral degree in sociology from Binghamton University (SUNY) in 1982, her dissertation entitled “Black Labor and White Capital: Formation of Jamaica as a Global Labor.” She is the author of Jamaican Labour Migration: White Capital and Black Labour, 1850-1930 (Westview Special Studies on Latin America and the Caribbean), published in 1987.

BEVERLY SILVER is Professor in the Department of Sociology and Director of the Arrighi Center for Global Studies at Johns Hopkins University. Her research focuses on problems of development, labor, social conflict, and war, using comparative and world-historical methods of analysis. By recasting these issues in a broad geographical and long-term historical framework, her work teases out patterns of recurrence, evolution and “true novelty” in contemporary processes of globalization. She teaches courses on social theory, macro-comparative methods, development, labor, and the political economy of global capitalism, and coordinates the Sociology Department’s Program in Global Social Change and Development. More recently, She has authored Forces of Labor: Workers’ Movements and Globalization Since 1870 (Cambridge University Press, 2003) and has edited, with Giovanni Arrighi, Chaos and Governance in the Modern World System (Univ. of Minnesota Press, 1999). Silver completed her doctoral degree in sociology at Binghamton University in 1991, her dissertation entitled “World Scale Patterns of Labor Unrest, 1870-Present.”

EVAN STARK is Associate Professor of Public Administration, Director of the Master’s in Public Health program at Rutgers-Newark and Director of the Division of Urban Health Administration at the UMDNJ School of Public Health. With a doctorate in sociology (received in 1984 from Binghamton University, his dissertation entitled “Medicine and Patriarchal Violence”) and a MSW, Stark specializes in health and medical care, family and community violence, political theory, the urban environment, social service and nonprofit management, criminal justice, and policy issues dealing with racial and gender justice. Stark is a leading authority on woman battering and child abuse and has won numerous awards for directing The Yale Trauma Studies in the 1980s with Anne Flitcraft, M.D. His book, Coercive Control: How Men Entrap Women in Personal Life (Oxford University Press, 2009) won the excellence award from the American Publishers Association and was named the 2007 best book in sociology/social work.

MOHAMMAD H. TAMDGIDI, retired associate professor of sociology at UMass Boston and previously full-time lecturer at SUNY-Oneonta and adjunct lecturer at SUNY-Binghamton, is the founding editor of Human Architecture: Journal of the Sociology of Self-Knowledge, a publication of OKCIR: the Omar Khayyam Center for Integrative Research in Utopia, Mysticism, and Science (Utopystics) which has served since 2002 to frame his independent research, pedagogical, and publishing initiatives. His publications include Advancing Utopistics: The Three Component Parts and Errors of Marxism (Routledge/Paradigm, 2007/09) and Gurdjieff and Hypnosis: A Hermeneutic Study (Palgrave Macmillan, 2009/12). He completed his doctoral studies in Sociology at Binghamton University in 2002, his dissertation entitled “Mysticism and Utopia: Towards the Sociology of Self-Knowledge and Human Architecture (A Study in Marx, Gurdjieff, and Mannheim).” Tamdgidi’s research, teaching, and publishing have been framed by an interest in understanding how personal self-knowledges of multiple selves and singular world-historical social structures constitute one another. This line of inquiry has itself been a result of his longstanding interest in understanding the underlying causes of failure of the world’s utopian, mystical, and scientific traditions in bringing about a just global society.

IMMANUEL WALLERSTEIN, founder of World-Systems Analysis, is Senior Research Scholar at the Yale Sociology Department. He attended Columbia University, where he received a B.A. in 1951, an M.A. in 1954 and a Ph.D. degree in 1959, and subsequently taught until 1971, when he became professor of sociology at McGill University. As of 1976, he served as distinguished professor of sociology at Binghamton University (SUNY) until his retirement in 1999, and as head of the Fernand Braudel Center for the Study of Economies, Historical Systems and Civilizations until 2005. Wallerstein has held several positions as visiting professor at universities worldwide, has been awarded multiple honorary degrees, has intermittently served as Directeur d’études associé at the École des Hautes Études en Sciences Sociales in Paris, and was president of the International Sociological Association between 1994 and 1998. During the 1990s, he chaired the Gulbenkian Commission on the Restructuring of the Social Sciences. In 2003 he received the Career of Distinguished Scholarship Award from the American Sociological Association. Wallerstein is the author or editor of numerous books, articles, and reports, including his multi-volume series The Modern World-System (I-IV) (Univ. of California Press, 2011), Historical Capitalism with Capitalist Civilization (Verso, 2011), and Utopistics: Or Historical Choices of the Twenty-First Century (The New Press, 1998). More recently he has edited The World is Out of Joint: World-Historical Interpretations of Continuing Polarizations (Routledge, 2016).
